ISBN: 978-986-959-601-5

The Book of Whale and Dolphin 後山鯨書

Every whale and dolphin is part of the dream of the sea.... Just like the Japanese manga Triton of the Sea, Liao presents his oceanic stories through the conversations between God (the sea), humans (the protagonist and the old captain), and the messengers (the cetaceans). These casual dialogues reveal the way of life and death. Let us learn to respect and love the messengers sent from above, as well as all living things.

Syaman 夏曼·藍波安 Rapongan

Syaman Rapongan (1957), a member of the Tao ethnic group, was born in Imorod Village, Lanyu (Orchid Island) Township, Taitung County. In 1989 he decided to go back to the outlying Orchid Island, where he set about relearning traditional Tao ways of life and developing two levels of identity: the first, an aboriginal individual's self-identity, and the second, the process by which the tribe checks and recognizes this identity.

The quest to return to the tribal village is apparent in Rapongan's The Myths of Patai Bay (1992), a collection of myths and legends. His feelings about the return to the tribe are laid bare in Cold Sea Affection (1997). In 1999 he published Black Wings, which won the Cho-Liu Wu Prize. Varied experience has enabled him to work for and write about his tribe from different perspectives, as in Recollection of the Waves (2002), which tells of his feelings for the ocean.

In 2005, May, he became the first Taiwanese person to cross the South Pacific in a canoe, with help from the "South Pacific Dream Travel" program set up by the Council for Cultural Affairs. Rapongan's prose collection The Voyager of Ponso no Tao (2007) and his short story collection The Old Fisherman (2009) have opened up new directions for Taiwan's oceanic literature.

Religion in Taiwan and China

臺灣與中國之宗教：地方性與傳承

This book explores how religion is and has been created, transmitted, embodied and changed in specific locations in late imperial, modern and contemporary Taiwan and China. By reducing the scale of the studies to a specific locale, phenomena such as religious change, conversion practice, individual transformation and the transmission of texts, authority, and charisma, can be reappraised.
